THE QUAKER OCCUPATION OF FAIRLANDS FARM (Burying Place Farm)

Richard Baker might well have lived and or owned Burying Place Farm and therefore was able to lease the land to the Quakers for the burying of their dead. My feelings are that he owned but did not live there. What the relationship was between him and John and Anne Baker I am not able to comment; however the 1670 Surrey Porch extension to Whites Farm have the initials of Richard and Elizabeth Baker picked out on it. When Richard and Fiona Hamilton owned Whites Farm House in the late 90's they had in their possession documents given to them by J.L. Brock relating to Whites Farm House. Whilst I was always promised both site and a copy of these documents, sadly this never happened. However what I was informed of was that Richard Baker was given Whites Farm by a "grateful Lord" and it possessed some 250 acres of land. Within its curtilage could have been Burying Place Farm. Who that "Lord" was was not mentioned; researching through a 1911 copy of Victorian County History, A History of Surrey Volume 3, The Woking Hundreds section, I believe I might well have narrowed it down somewhat. Whether Elizabeth was buried with her husband or not is also a question that needs an answer as well as whether they did or did not have children.

I now paraphrase my research :-

13th Century. Werpsdene and Manor was held by Earl Roger in chief at the time of Domesday. Turald held it of him, and the rest of the land of Earl Roger in Surrey it became part of the honour of Gloucester.

Gilbert de Basseville held a knight's fee in Worplesdeon of the honour of Gloucester. The Manor of Gilbert de Basseville appears early in the 13th Century in two moieties (portions). 1314 1 part to Roland de Wykeford who held half a knight's fee of the Earl of Gloucester; Mary de Wintershull the other portion. The portions were brought together through marriage however in 1363 the de Basseville portion was conveyed to the Crown; it was supposed that the Wintershull portion was also conveyed to the Crown but not proved.

17th Century 1623 The Crown granted a lease of the Manor of Worplesdon for 3 lives to John Murray, Lord Annandale. It is thought he sold the 3 lives interest to one Charles Harbord in 1631. 1653 Sir Charles Harbord held court; 1665 William Harbord held court. 1668 Moiety granted by John Payne of Hurtmore to Thomas Newton of Stoke having already sold him the other half. Thomas Newton held court 1670. By 1681 the Manor of Worplesdon was sold to the Earl of Onslow in whose possession it still remains.

I believe that it most probably was John Murray, Lord Annandale who would have given the land to Richard maybe at the same time Charles Harbord comes on the scene. It is possible that Bunny Roker the current owner of the Farm might have documents relating to both properties that might clear up the questions still puzzling me. Should any one know the whereabouts of either Richard or Fiona Hamilton then it is still possible some of the ownership and names of people living in Whites Farm before it came into Brock's possession might be solved.

THE QUAKER OCCUPATION OF FAIRLANDS FARM.

(formerly known as "Burying Place Farm")

A booklet on "Early Quakerism in Guildford." was published in 1952, when it became apparent that the precise location of the old Quaker Burial Ground at Worplesdon been forgotten, not to mention the names of those buried therein.

However, in August 1954, Herbert Rowntree of The Bungalow, Worplesdon, published a Supplement to the above booklet, establishing the site of the Worplesdon Burial Ground, including other historical detail and a list of the names of the Friends who had been buried there.

What follows is based on the account of Herbert Rowntree, with the addition of a brief history of George Fox and the origins of the Quaker movement.

The local records of the Society of Friends show that, in the year 1667, the Quakers of Worplesdon - who were numerous at that time - acquired a piece of ground in Worplesdon to use as a Burying Place, as shown below.

Extract from "Dorking & Horsham Monthly Meeting - Register of Trust Property, 1835".

- (a) "A Lease for 2000 years at a Pepper Corn Rent, if demanded, from the 25th March, 1667, granted by Richd. Baker to John Smith, Thomas Russell, Stephen Smith, Jno. Burt, Henry Gill, William Constable, Thos. Seaman, Robert Stedman, Jacob Bembrick and Robert Iver, of about 20 perches or rods, also 2 rods between the Wall and the Road, without impeachment of waste, with various Trust conditions, for a Burial Ground."
- (b) "A lease for 2000 years at a Pepper Corn Rent from the 30th Sept., 1705, by Richd. Baker, Wm. Constable, Henry Gill, Thomas Russell and Jacob Bembrick, to John Westbrook, John Fields, Richd. Constable, John Smith, Joseph Smith, James Inwood, Caleb Woods the elder, John Cooper and Jno. Woods, No Trust conditions - but without impeachment of waste."
- (c) "Subsequent assignments in July 1740, July 1782, May 1806 and 8th month 1843, the last by John Pritchard, Richd. Kidd, Benj. Kidd, and John Downham Sweetapple, surviving Trustees, to John Wible, Wm. Marsh, Thos. Robinson, Edward Waller Martin, Thos. Spencer Junr, Robert Marsh, Thos. Tulley Dann, John Cheal, Richard Pollard, Martin Robinson, Charles Charman Elgar and John Dale."

An extract from a Minute of Dorking, Horsham and Guildford Monthly Meeting, 15th of 12th month, 1852 reads thus; "The property to which the foregoing Deeds relate was sold in the year 1852 for £40 (of which £20 was apportioned towards purchase of ground at Ifield in 1855)."

from the house and having a curved brick ceiling. This was said by Mrs. Brock to have been used as the mortuary for the Quaker Burial Ground, although no supporting evidence has been found.

It is almost certain that when he visited Worplesdon, George Fox would enter that homestead, as one cannot imagine that Richard Baker, who generously gave the land for the Burying Place, would fail to offer hospitality to Friends on the occasion of such visits.

Returning now, to the question whether Dr. Williamson was correct in thinking that the "gray farm-house" was formerly the home of Stephen Smith, the following information is of interest.

Therefore, although it is not likely that Stephen Smith was the occupier during 1673 - 1677, the period during which George Fox paid visits to him, he may perhaps have been in residence there.

(III) In his "Journal", George Fox (the founder of Quakerism) recorded that he visited the house of Stephen Smith, for the purpose of holding meetings, in 1673 and 1677. This Stephen Smith suffered distraint upon his cattle on numerous occasions for his refusal to pay tithes: and the following is an abbreviated extract from a quotation appearing in "Early Friends in Surrey and Sussex" by T. W. Marsh:-

"This year (1678) died that faithful servant of God, Stephen Smith of Worplesdon in Surrey, a man of account in the World. He was "born the 15th of the 7th month, 1623, and resided some time at Scanderoon (Alexandria) in Syria, as a merchant. He received the truth in 1665, and gave up to obey it and walk therein, and suffered "both in person and estate by imprisonment and spoil of goods. An honest and upright man, one that feared God and was of good report in his country the Lord endued him with the gift of ministry".

There is appended to this memorandum a list containing all the known names of Friends who were buried in the Worplesdon Burying Ground. This has been compiled from the record at Friends House, Euston Road, London, which bears the following compendious title:-

"Digested Copy of the Registers of Burials of the Quarterly Meeting of Sussex and Surrey comprising a period from the year 1645 to the year 1837, both inclusive, - - - which said Registers were surrendered to the Crown Commissioners of Non Parochial Registers pursuant to the Act of Parliament of the third and fourth of Victoria, chapter the ninety-second".

It will be seen that those names number 185, whereas it has been stated that 214 burials took place in that Ground. The difference doubtless represents burials after 1837 and up to 1852 when the Burial Ground ceased to be used as such.

Author's Note. This shortened edition of the Supplement does not contain the lists of names of those Friends buried in the Quaker Burial Grounds at Worplesdon and Guildford. Such lists are included, in the complete edition, copies of which are filed in the archives of the Society of Friends at Dorking, Brighton and Friends House (Euston Road,

THE QUAKER OCCUPATION OF FAIRLANDS FARM.

(formerly known as "Burying Place Farm").

THE FRIENDS BURIED IN THE WORPLESDON BURIAL GROUND.

THE FRIENDS BURIED IN THE GUILDFORD BURIAL GROUND.

When the booklet on "Early Quakerism in Guildford" was published (in 1952), it was noted that the list of names identifying Friends who were buried in the old Burial Ground situated in North Street, Guildford (used as such from 1673 to 1877), obviously was incomplete: that whereas the names given numbered only 74, it was known that there had been many more burials there.

Furthermore at that time there was uncertainty as to the precise location of the old Burial Ground at Worplesdon; and the identity of Friends buried there was not known.

This Supplement refers to the names of Friends who were buried in those two grounds, numbering 344 in Guildford and 185 in Worplesdon: and it contains information establishing the site of the Worplesdon Ground, as well as a bearing upon the place of residence of Stephen Smith (who was visited by George Fox).

The founder of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, was an Englishman named George Fox. He was born in 1624, at Drayton in Leicestershire, of Puritan parents. As a boy, George was extremely religious and at the age of nineteen, disgusted by the sinfulness of many Christians, he left his family and went off alone. After much studying of the Bible, Fox came to the conclusion that God was to be found only within the soul of each individual.

In 1647, at the age of 23, Fox began his ministry, traveling from village to village. He preached his new belief of the "Inner Light" and soon won many converts. England was torn by civil war, however, and the authorities did not like this sect that claimed equality for all and refused to take up arms or swear allegiance. Hundreds were jailed, including Fox who wrote his 'Journal', and pamphlets supporting his beliefs, while in prison.

George Fox was a man who lived by his principles and had little respect for the Church of England, which he considered irreligious. He believed, like the Puritans, that the formal practices of the Church of England violated the spirit of Christianity. He taught that people can worship God directly without help from clergy. Despite severe persecution, no one could halt his preaching. His followers refused to attend the services of the Church of England or to pay tithes for its support. They also refused to take oaths, on the ground that an oath recognizes a double standard of truth. They were frugal and plain in dress and speech. They would often tremble in religious excitement. When Fox was on trial for his beliefs, before a judge in Derby in 1650, he bade the judge to "quake at the word of the Lord." The judge subsequently referred to his followers as "Quakers", the name by which they are popularly known today.

In 1652 George Fox, standing on Pendle Hill in Lancashire, had a vision and this heralded the beginning of the Religious Society of Friends. The authorities persecuted them with fines, confiscation of property, and imprisonment. Nevertheless the sect flourished and in 1689 the Toleration Act ended the persecution. Meanwhile, Quakers could settle freely in America on a large grant of land (Pennsylvania) given by King Charles II to the Quaker William Penn in 1681.

After Oliver Cromwell became ruler of England, Fox found a refuge at the home of Judge Fell, Cromwell's chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Fox died in London on Jan. 13, 1691.

Quakers still reflect the teachings of George Fox. They do not sanction taking part in war because they feel that war causes spiritual damage through hatred. Most Quakers therefore refuse to give military service, but individuals are allowed to follow their own convictions. The Friends have no ritual, sacraments, or ordained clergy. They appoint elders and overseers to serve at each meeting. The meeting for worship is held "on the basis of silence." Members speak in prayer or testimony as the "Inward Light" moves them. After an hour the meeting ends with the members shaking hands. Congregations generally hold a meeting for business every month.

The QUAKER BURIAL GROUND at WORPLESDON

The residence of Stephen Smith, Quaker, 1622 - 1678

The local records of the Society of Friends show that in the year 1667 the Quakers of Worplesdon who, at that time, were numerous, acquired a piece of ground in Worplesdon Parish for the purpose of a Burying Place: and investigations have been pursued with a view to establishing what was the location of that Ground.

The matter is linked with certain of the early Quakers, viz. Richard Baker (who died 1722) and, possibly Stephen Smith (1623-1678), who were themselves buried in the Quaker Burial Ground where, it is on record, in all 214 bodies were laid to rest.

The facts, as known at present (1954), are as follows:-

- (I) Extract from "Dorking & Horsham Monthly Meeting Register of Trust Property, 1835".
 - (a) A Lease for 2000 years at a Pepper Corn Rent, if demanded, from the 25th March, 1667, granted by Richd. Baker to John Smith, Thomas Russell, Stephen Smith, Jno. Burt, Henry Gill, William Constable, Thos. Seaman, Robert Stedman, Jacob Bembrick and Robert Iver, of about 20 perches or rods, also 2 rods between the Wall and the Road, without impeachment of waste, with various Trust conditions, for a Burial Ground.
 - (b) A lease for 2000 years at a Pepper Corn Rent from the 30th Sept., 1705, by Richd. Baker, Wm. Constable, Henry Gill, Thomas Russell and Jacob Bembrick, to John Westbrook, John Fields, Richd. Constable, John Smith, Joseph Smith, James Inwood, Caleb Woods the elder, John Cooper and Jno. Woods. No Trust conditions - but without impeachment of waste.
 - (c) Subsequent assignments in July 1740, July 1782, May 1806 and 8th month 1843, the last by John Pritchard, Richd. Kidd, Benj. Kidd, and John Downham Sweetapple, surviving Trustees, to John Wible, Wm. Marsh, Thos. Robinson, Edward Waller Martin, Thos. Spencer Junr, Robert Marsh, Thos. Tulley Dann, John Cheal, Richard Pollard, Martin Robinson, Charles Charman Elgar and John Dale.
- (II) Extract from a Minute of Dorking, Horsham and Guildford Monthly Meeting, 15th of 12th month, 1852.

The property to which the foregoing Deeds relate was sold in the year 1852 for £40 (of which £20 was apportioned towards purchase of ground at Ifield in 1855).
- (III) In his "Journal", George Fox (the founder of Quakerism recorded that he visited the house of Stephen Smith, for the purpose of holding meetings, in 1673 and 1677. This Stephen Smith suffered distraint upon his cattle on numerous occasions for his refusal to pay tithes: and the following is an abbreviated extract from a quotation appearing in "Early Friends in Surrey and Sussex" by T.W. Marsh.

"This year (1678) died that faithful servant of God, Stephen Smith of Worplesdon in Surrey, a man of account in the World. He was born the 15th of the 7th month, 1623, and resided some time at Scanderoon (Alexandria) in Syria, as a merchant. He received the truth in 1665, and gave up to obey it and walk therein, and suffered both in person and estate by imprisonment and spoil of goods. An honest and upright man, one that feared God and was of good report in his country; the Lord endued him with the gift of ministry".

- (IV) In his book (published in 1904) entitled "Guildford in the Olden Time", Dr. George C. Williamson states that he remembered "as a little boy, when staying with the late Mr. Jesse Wells at Merrest Wood Farm, Worplesdon, being taken up by him to the cornfield occupying the site of the old Burial Ground (Quaker), and having the boundaries of the land pointed out by Mr. Wells. The Ground has long since been merged in the fields near, boundaries and hedges removed, and the exact spot changed very much in appearance".

Dr. Williamson then adds: "Stephen Smith is said to have lived in the large gray farm-house near Merrest Wood by the side of the road, and the Meetings were held in the orchard next to the house, and in the winter in the large stone-floored kitchen".
- (V) The late Miss Evelyn Thompson stated in her "Notes on the History of Worplesdon that:- "The Worplesdon Friends" burial ground, which was sold in 1852, i.e. now part of Fairlands Farm. The walls and buildings were pulled down and the bricks used to build the cottages at Merrist Wood". (It is not known what was the source of Miss Thompson's information)
- (VI) The accuracy of Dr. Williamson's statements as to the location of the Burial Ground and of Stephen Smith's residence, is doubtful. It will be observed that he recounts having been taken up to the site of the Burial Ground" and, although it might well be expected that higher ground would be chosen for such a purpose, it will be seen later in this memorandum that the Burial Ground was, with little (if any) doubt, on ground lying lower than most of the Merrist Wood Estate.

Concerning Stephen Smith's residence, Dr. Williamson's "large gray farm house near Merrest Wood by the side of the road" could scarcely be other than what is now known as Fairlands Farm House which (as will be seen later in this memorandum) was probably occupied by another Quaker, Richard Baker, who presented the land for the Burying Place.

But Miss Thompson's statement that the Burial Ground was on Fairlands Farm appears to be borne out by three maps which, however, disagree as to the site on Fairlands Farm. The earliest of these maps is "Rocque's Map of Surrey (1762)" which shows Merrist Wood Farm (but spelt "Marystood") by lettering on what is the present site of that farm, but no name appears on the plan for the fields now forming Fairlands Farm. On the latter, however, there appear the words

"Burying Place", this being on the same side of the Aldershot road as is the Farm House, but nearer to Gravitt's Lane.

The second map is one the original date of which is unknown, but which was reproduced to form part of a Notice of Sale, dated 1835, which Mr. J. L. Brook very kindly produced to the writer. The sale announced was of "An Estate called Burying Place Farm" and by the plan, as well as by the wording of the notice, this clearly was what is now known as Fairlands Farm. The plan shows a "Burying Place", but this is sited in the field immediately opposite to Fairlands Farm House, that is on the other side of Aldershot Road. The word "Quaker" does not appear on either of these maps (nor in the Notice of Sale), but it would be curious if there were apart from the Church-yard, two burial places near together and even if there had been two, presumably both would have been shown on the maps. Rocque's map was drawn in 1762 which was nearly a century after the acquisition of the land by Quakers (as a Body), the land remaining in that possession for a further century.

Any doubt as to the location of the Burying Ground seems to be removed, however, by the third map viz, a Tithe Map of Worplesdon, dated 1839, this having kindly been produced by Miss Dance, the Guildford Archivist, which map clearly indicates that the Ground was on the opposite side of the road to Fairlands Farm House. The record of Ownerships relating to that Tithe Map shows the plot as No. 702, and the Landowner as "Quakers Burying Ground", the area being stated as 22 poles.

It happens that recently (July 1954), a trench was excavated to a depth of three to four feet through that plot of ground (for the purpose of laying telephone cables) and the present writer was shown by the Contractor's foreman certain markings which, he stated, clearly indicated that in some past period there had been a series of excavations and filling-in such as might well have been caused by the removal of coffins.

There is appended to this memorandum a list containing all the known names of Friends who were buried in the Worplesdon Burying Ground. This has been compiled from the record at Friends House, Euston Road, London, which bears the following compendious title:-

"Digested Copy of the Registers of Burials of the Quarterly Meeting of Sussex and Surrey comprising a period from the year 1645 to the year 1837, both inclusive, which said Registers were surrendered to the Crown Commissioners of Non Parochial Registers pursuant to the Act of Parliament of the third and fourth of Victoria, chapter the ninety-second".

It will be seen that those names number 185, whereas it has been stated that 214 burials took place in that Ground. The difference doubtless represents burials after 1837 and up to 1852 when the Burial Ground ceased. to be used as such.

(VII) Fairlands Farm House

Returning, now, to the question whether Dr. Williamson was correct in thinking that the "gray farm-house" was formerly the home of Stephen Smith, the following information is of interest.

By the courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. J.L. Brook, the writer was enabled to inspect the Farm House. Although the front part of the building is of a later date (it bears the date 1736), the back part is very definitely of a much earlier period, and might well be three hundred years old. It is half-timbered, and there are three large window spaces which are bricked up, for no obvious reason. It seems probable, therefore, that they were closed when the window-tax was imposed in 1695. (Incidentally, that tax was not repealed until 1651, and it drew a revenue in 1850 amounting to £1,832,684).

Another feature of Fairlands Farm House is a single-storey building outshot from the house (but communicating with it), having a curved brick ceiling and appearing to be a part of the original old building. This is stated by Mrs. Brook to have been reputed to have formed the mortuary for the Quaker Burial Ground. Such a use must, however, be in doubt inasmuch as the Farm House was presumably erected before there was an adjacent Burial Ground; in which event any new structure intended for use as a mortuary would be more likely to be sited on the Burial Ground (across the road from the Farm House) rather than as an adjunct to the Farm House. Furthermore, if Miss Thompson's history be correct there were as we have already noted, buildings on the burial Ground the bricks from which "were used to build the cottages at Merrist Wood".

At the commencement of this memorandum appeared the information that the land for the Burying Ground was provided by Richard Baker, from which it would be expected that Richard was then the owner (or, at all events, the occupier) of "Burying Place Farm" (now Fairlands Farm). That this was actually the case is supported by the fact that the stonework of the extended front part of the Farm House bears the name of "John Baker" in conjunction with the date 1736. This John Baker died in 1750 (being buried in the Burial Ground there). He was the son of John and Ann Baker but the parentage of Richard Baker (who died in 1722) does not appear. It may be that Richard was an Uncle or, perhaps, an elder brother of John: but whatever may have been the relationship, the facts seem to point to Richard Baker having been in occupation of the Farm House in 1667, and to John Baker having been there in 1736. Therefore, it is not likely that Stephen Smith was the occupier during 1673-1677, the period during which George Fox paid visits to him. (It will be noted that Stephen Smith was one of the original lessees from Richard Baker - of the Burial Ground).

The foregoing seems to establish the location of the old Burial Ground: but, in achieving that, it would appear that we have forfeited the (supposed) knowledge as to the home of that worthy Quaker, Stephen Smith. Therefore, no longer can one point out to visitors the charming Farm House now known as Fairlands as having been that home: but, even so, it is almost certain that when he visited Worplesdon, George Fox would enter that homestead, as one cannot imagine that Richard Baker, who generously gave the land for the Burying Place, would fail to offer hospitality to Friends on the occasion of such visits.

Author's Note. This shortened edition of the Supplement does not contain the lists of names of those Friends buried in the Quaker Burial Grounds at Worplesdon and Guildford. Such lists are included in the complete edition, copies of which are filed in the archives of the Society of Friends at Dorking, Brighton and Friends House, Euston Road, N.W.

Copies of such lists will also be available for perusal by anyone interested, upon application to the Author.
